Stem cells, PRP, arthroscopy and the rest

What really works for shoulder and knee pain ...and what doesn't!

Shoulder and knee arthritis is often the perfect storm of bad genetics, niggling sports injuries and the relentless march of time and weight - on average 1kg of weight adds up to 4kg of force to the knee when you are squatting.

And with an ageing population and two in three Australian adults now overweight or obese, arthritis is more common than ever.

With this new onslaught of knee pain, almost every patient or GP I speak to asks me the same questions.

Do stem cells and PRP work? When should I use arthroscopy? How many cortisone injections are safe? What is the Biopen?

I've put together this quick snapshot for GPs referring to the latest college position statements, and peer reviewed studies on the latest non-invasive orthopaedic treatments. I look forward to seeing you at our next GP event or visit in your rooms.

Dr John Smith, Penrith Orthopaedics

FINANCIAL REVIEW

Digital-savvy consumers driving change in treatment methods

That the digitally enabled consumer will continue to drive the revolution in healthcare as it transitions from being a provider-centric system in Australia was the consensus among attendees at a Future of Health roundtable co-hosted by The Australian Financial Review and the Commonwealth Bank.

Malcolm Parmenter, chief executive officer of Primary Health Care, which is responsible for more than 8 million GP visits a year, says Australia has a very provider-centric health care.

“There isn’t a provider out there who doesn’t think that they’re consumer-centric, but they’re consumer-centric in a very provider-centric way,” he says.

“In Australia, we still deliver healthcare a

“We should be able to provide care where people want it, how they want it, when they want it. That means access to medical centres, for instance. It needs to be seamless and it needs to be that the reception desk probably disappears in that.”

“How to involve consumers in the care equation shouldn’t be a question for medical professionals, it should be a blueprint for their business”
